Gloria Brown's New Passion Is Wildlife Photography

by Jill Connor

For Gloria Brown, her photography can be summed up in three sentences: "It's a passion. It's a hobby. It's a love for the birds." The Lanham resident spends a few hours a day nearly every day of the week at Greenbelt Lake photographing the wildlife, especially the birds.

Brown retired six years ago after working for the government for over 50 years. She started walking around the lake every day for exercise. She routinely called her son Bruce Smith, a hobbyist wildlife photographer himself, to tell him about the wildlife she was seeing daily. Smith finally told his mother to buy a camera and start taking her own photos. For the past

It's a lot to learn about," Brown is learning about the animals she photographs through Google, and she has also joined the Google and Facebook groups

Greenbelt Trends Toward Fitness at Beginning of Year

by Amy Hansen

Tis the season to join the gym and work off those holiday cookies. Greenbelters are no exception to the annual fitness trend that begins in early January and ends ... well, later.

Greenbelt Aquatic & Fitness Center has been crowded right after the holidays, said Souzan Noaman, GAFC administrative assistant.

"It is much busier than normal," she said. "We've had a lot of registrations for classes."

Noaman said 935 people have used the facilities between December 30 and January 2.

Planet Fitness in Beltway Plaza tries to make it easy for people to start working out by lowering their membership fee. "That brings in most of the resolutioners," said General Manager Raquel Capuana. On Monday, January 2 the gym had 32 new members sign up. On a normal day they get about 10, she said.

What's more, people with memberships are getting out and using them, Capuana said. They had 658 people use the facilities on January 2, much higher than normal.

Planet Fitness is meeting the increased demand by adding

Green Team Advises City Council To Move Ahead with Solar Power

by Kathleen Gallagher

The Greenbelt City Council met on December 19 with representatives of the city's Green Team Solar Circle and staff of the Public Works Department to continue a conversation started at a worksession a year earlier regarding plans to implement the use of solar power for city facilities.

Steven Skolnik, chair of the solar group, emphasized that the topic of discussion for this meeting was municipal solar use, though many other opportunities for use by residents or other private or commercial entities are also available now.

In addition to Skolnik, representatives of the Green Team included John Lippert, who is chair of the Green Team and the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability (Green ACES), and Matthew Dirksen. Staff from the Public Works Department included Director James Sterling, Sustainability Coordinator Luisa Robles, and Environmental Coordinator Erin Josephitis.

At the request of Mayor Pro Tem Judith Davis, Skolnik gave an overview of the reasons for the city government to pursue the use of solar energy for its own electricity needs, which include both environmental benefits and a significant lowering of the city's costs for electricity.

Many Maryland counties and municipalities are now incorporating solar into their energy mix, Skolnik said, with a motivating factor being that the cost inflation of electricity in Maryland has exceeded the increase in the cost of living for the last 15 years. The rapid growth of solar use in the state has resulted in both lower installation costs and also lower incentive payments, which together suggest a need to take action sooner rather than later. According to Skolnik, the costs for enabling solar energy use are now nearing parity with those of traditional energy sources.

At the 2015 meeting, the hope was to piggyback on a Montgomery County contract, with an array of solar panels to be located on Greenbriar property toward the end of Mandan Road. The city holds a right of way on the property but is not using it.

For a number of reasons the first plan did not pan out. It now appears to make more sense for Greenbriar to pursue solar use on its own as a non-municipal project. The Green Team would like to see the board of directors of

by Amy Hansen

The snowplows cannot be put away with their plows on. The plows need to be removed for the trucks to fit inside. But Jim Sterling, director of Public Works, said that all 16 trucks and plows have been serviced and are ready for action.

No snow yet, but the Old Farmer's Almanac, as well as normal experience, predict that Greenbelt will get hit with both snow and ice before spring arrives.

The city has been working since November to be ready. Sterling said the public works crew checked out the equipment starting in November, made sure it worked and that everyone remembered how to use it. They've attached salt spreaders to the large trucks – except for the three that are needed for leaf removal – and they have 350 tons of salt ready. Sterling said he ordered the salt in August. A normal year requires about 300 tons, he said, noting that last year was light, but the year before had a lot of snow. Other necessities include an order of magnesium chloride salt to be used in Roosevelt Center.

The plowing and snow shoveling follow a priority system that has basically stayed the same for decades.

According to the city's website, the first priority for plows "is to open the main streets. These streets are the key to maintaining a steady flow of traffic since most residents live within a few blocks of such routes."

Similarly, the priorities for shoveling are identified on a map. "We update it when we know if the schools are going to open or not," said Sterling.

The final piece is personnel. They do not hire more people during the winter, but do call people for more hours. For that reason, the city maintains cots as part of the winter equipment.

"Last year when we had the big snow, we knew we would be going for a long time," Sterling explained. "People slept here. We have cots for people who don't live close by." Then he laughed. "Actually the people who live close wanted to stay, too."

Envelopes for News Review Carriers Are Now Distributed

The News Review Carriers remain hopeful that you won't forget them. It is never too late to send a tip to a deserving young person who distributes your newspaper. Envelopes marked with the year 2016 were distributed in the last two weeks and we hope residents will act with their typical generosity.

If you didn't get an envelope and would like to send a tip to your carrier, please put it in an envelope and send it to the paper at Greenbelt News Review, 15 Crescent Road, Suite 100, and make sure the delivery address is on the envelope. Clearly mark the envelope with the word Carrier and make sure your address is legible so we can get it to the right person.

Economic Development Study

The recent Greenbelt Economic Development Study report by the Hyattsville Community Development Corporation consultants on economic development should embarrass the Greenbelt Council members who voted to pay up to $33,000 for it and the member who suggested this firm. The recommendations of public-private partnerships and tax incentives are standard boilerplate recommendations that many people have heard before from those who wish to privatize public resources.

Public-private partnerships have been supported by the Maryland Democratic Party and encouraged by the Obama Administration for the last few years as an easy way to fund projects without accepting responsibility for taxes. Now Trump apparently plans to use public-private partnerships to pay for rebuilding U.S. infrastructure. But these partnerships come at a great financial cost to citizens, as those cities such as Bayonne N.J., Missoula Mont., and Santa Paula Calif., which allowed their water system to become privately owned, have learned (see New York Times, December 25, 2016). Even our local public-private partnership with the owner of the stores around Roosevelt Center has had tensions in the past. If a situation arises in which the private entity must choose between profit and the public good, it is most likely to choose profit because its purpose is to make as much money as possible. We see this every day in the way some companies treat the environment.

The consultant calls for development around Roosevelt Center on city-owned land. I can only imagine what this recommendation means. Can we expect a 20 story office building on the lawn behind the Mother and Child statue? Does the consultant want us to give up the parking lot on which the Farmers Market is held? Alternatively, perhaps the ball fields, tennis courts and woods near the Youth Center would be bulldozed for private companies. But any private company would probably also want the city to give it tax incremental financing (TIF) that foregoes city taxes to encourage them to come to Greenbelt; so the city income would not increase much. Developers (like Trump) risk little of their own money; they borrow money and recoup the expenses from future users. The city collectively could save money by itself borrowing through issuing bonds to pay for the initial costs of desired projects.

The report apparently says Greenbelt is "permit/license heavy" (News Review July 14, 2016). These words might be interpreted to imply that the consultant wants businesses to be free to do whatever they want. The News Review articles have not mentioned any recommendation to encourage formation of cooperatives that have an economic focus; cooperatives pay taxes too.

It seems that the consultant's main recommendations for economic development are to use city tax money to make private entities wealthier. In my estimation, council should pay at most five hundred dollars for this report and ignore its recommendations.

Why Worry?

Some people worry about climate change. I don't, I welcome it.

During our first winter in Greenbelt, the weather dropped to -5. It's not been nearly that low in recent years. The South is coming to us, we don't have to move south.

Public charter schools are tuition-free and open to all students. The Maryland State Department of Education provides support and guidance to local school systems engaged in authorizing public charter schools, and to charter school operators. The general purpose of the program is to establish an alternative means within the existing public school system in order to provide innovative learning opportunities and creative educational approaches to improve the education of students.

Shiatsu means finger pressure in Japanese and treatment is done on a mat on the floor with no oils. The same medical theory used in acupuncture is used in Shiatsu with the practitioner using feet, fingers, elbows and knees to treat the client. Many clients find they are both relaxed and energized after a session. Irwin also holds a B.S. in Psychology.

Irwin will give an overview of Shiatsu, offer photos of some of her study time in Japan and China and answer questions. A 20-minute self-Shiatsu treatment will conclude the program.

Art of the Airport Tower At Local Aviation Museum

The College Park Aviation Museum hosts a free reception to open Art of the Airport Tower exhibition on Thursday, January 5 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. The exhibition comprises 50 large-scale photographs by Smithsonian photographer Carolyn J. Russo and explores the forms and functions of airport traffic control towers in the U.S. and around the world. The reception will feature live music by talented local guitarist, Jan Knutson. The exhibit is on view now through March 10, 2017.

Russo traveled to 85 airports in 23 countries to capture images of these towers. The resulting photographs can be interpreted as monumental abstractions, symbols of cultural expression and testimonies of technological change. Starting out as a strictly functional structure, the airport tower has become a symbol of its airport, its community and even its country. Visitors to the Stockholm-Arlanda Airport in Sweden, for example, are greeted by two lookout points perched like birds at the top of the control tower to evoke protective ravens from Nordic mythology, while the crescent-shaped tower at the Abu Dhabi International Airport resembles the sail of a traditional Arabic boat to emphasize the area's maritime heritage.

MDBirding where she has found a lot of information and friends.

Brown has become such a regular feature of the lake she is often recognized and approached. "I have had a lot of people approach me and ask me what I am doing and what I am looking at. I always tell them what it is and some people stick around for more comments." Brown's passion is evident by the time commitment to her photography. She spends three or four hours every day photographing animals. "I get so excited sometimes when I am taking the pictures that these people that are with me they say they can't believe my enthusiasm. I guess because of my age. I really like what I am doing, so I guess that is why I am so enthusiastic."

Although Brown does go to a few other locations in the area, she routinely comes to Buddy Attick Park because she enjoys the variety of wildlife, the quiet and safe nature of the park, the closeness of the police station, and of course the beauty of the lake itself.

Brown will walk with her Nikon L340 in the cold and snow, and even take photos when the lake is covered in ice. She has recently started taking videos and has one of birds trying to walk on the ice. "I do love the birds, although they are skittish. To me it is a challenge, and I like the challenge. I just like walking and observing them, period. I am just looking at God's beauty and the things I have walked by for years and not paid attention to, and now I'm more into actually observing and seeing what's around me."

Workshop on Communication Across the Partisan Divide

by Jill Connor

Are you challenged when family members, friends or co-workers have viewpoints on politics, child-rearing or money that are radically different from your own? Jane Connor McMahon, Ph.D., a new resident of Greenbelt and a certified trainer of nonviolent communication, thinks there is a need to develop an understanding of others and the reasons people feel and act as they do. "Understanding is not the same as agreeing; it is the foundation for families, communities and a nation that works for everyone." She is offering three free workshops at the Greenbelt Community Center in January that address the themes of improving your relationships and decreasing conflict, with specific focus on the partisan divide that has deepened during and since the recent presidential election. One of the goals is to provide healing for people who are seeking it and unity through greater understanding of ourselves and others in our country.

The scheduled workshops are Transforming Post-Election Blues on Sunday, January 8 from 2 to 4 p.m., Energy for Building a World of Compassion on Saturday, January 21 from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.; and Connecting Across Differences – Post-Election on Sunday, January 22 from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

For more information, visit <http://www.capitalnvc.org/events/summary> or contact janemconnor@gmail.com or 202-684-5974.

McMahon has trained Nonviolent Communication on five continents and is presently a restorative justice consultant for Washington, D.C., schools. Her co-presenters include Kanya Likanasudh, who has a masters degree in divinity, is an international trainer of Nonviolent Communication, and a trainer and consultant for schools, prisons, hospitals and businesses in Thailand, and Ian H. Solomon, J.D., CEO of SolomonGlobal, a training and consulting firm devoted to the art and science of cooperation. Solomon has been a vice president of the University of Chicago Law School and an associate dean of Yale Law School. He has also been an executive director for the World Bank Group engaged in multi-lateral diplomacy, negotiation and cooperation. The event is sponsored by the Prince George's County Peace and Justice Coalition, Capital Center for Nonviolent Communication and Maryland United for Peace and Justice.

Nonviolent Communication, the approach at the foundation of the workshops, was developed over 50 years ago and is being shared world-wide today. It involves changing how we listen to and respond to others and in how we express ourselves. McMahon shared the following example of using a Nonviolent Communication technique to increase the chances of people connecting with each other. At a presentation on family relations, a middle-aged man asked what the trainer would recommend saying to a brother he had been estranged from for 20 years and would be seeing at an upcoming dinner. The trainer said, "Brother, I'm in deep, deep pain and sadness about our estrangement and I long for a way for us to reconnect. I so miss being in your life and you in mine, but I have no idea about how to bridge the huge gap that has come between us. I'm wondering if you have any interest in reconnecting." The elements that made this a heartfelt and effective communication are part of what Nonviolent Communication is about.

Musings on Life in Greenbelt

"Snaps" Suzanne Ginger

ring in the frosty air, I smiled and remembered my growing up days in Chicago, where snow days there were often a cause for celebration.

Snow's not the only thing that brings us together. While it's a while off, we have spring to look forward to – the postman told me how many gardening brochures and catalogs he's starting to deliver. With the spring comes those first few warm days. We turn out of our cocoons, leaving behind our electric heat and enjoying the play of sunshine on our upturned faces. Some of us giggle with giddiness. Yet we all suck in deep breaths of joyously perfumed air, brought to us by the lilacs and bridalwreath. In our gardens, we talk over the prospects for the upcoming season. Will it be a year for spinach? How will the sugar peas do? Can the beans do well this time around? So we talk and share.

With the advent of warmth comes the Farmers Market. Gathering outside the Aquatic Center, the vendors offer us yet another chance to celebrate community. Over purchases of

While last year offered us studies in surprises – everything from Brexit to the Chicago Cubs win to the recent elections – 2017 promises us even more. Greenbelt, fortunately, offers us a respite from the often fast-changing and hard-charging outside world.

Remember Snowmageddon? It presented us with an opportunity to enjoy the community spirit that is omnipresent in Greenbelt. Thirty inches of snow – measured by one neighbor's hardware store yardstick fastened to the lamp-post – smothered our enthusiasm for travel, yet it hiked the neighborliness quotient tremendously. I saw men swathed in woolen scarves shoveling out walks for elderly neighbors. Kids with cheap plastic sleds offered each other rides down newly made hills. Spontaneously, whole courts turned out for potlucks. And some residents from one end of Ridge snowshoed down to the other end, just for salsa, chips and split pea soup with new friends. ## SOLAR continued from page 1

Greenbriar Condominiums meet with council to discuss limited use by Greenbriar of the land the city is not using.

Removing the Greenbriar component from the municipal project was one big change in the 2015 plan, as was the decision not to pursue the Montgomery County contract. Another change in the overall plan since 2015 is that grants would be solicited for smaller parts of what had originally been viewed as one large project. Everyone agreed that this approach was better, with parts of the project able to be pursued at their own pace and without putting all the eggs in one basket.

For the larger part of the project – the installation of a solar power generating system to offset almost all of the city's electrical energy needs – Public Works staff and the Green Team have since considered a proposal from a different vendor, Standard Solar, LLC in Rockville. Robert Busler, director of business development for the firm, was present at the meeting to discuss their proposal.

Under Standard Solar's proposed plan, the solar panel array would be located off site (outside of the city) in a location available to Standard Solar in Prince George's County that has a direct connection to the PEPCO grid. The city would purchase 100 percent of the solar power the system generates under a 20-year power purchase agreement. The array would be installed, operated and maintained by Standard Solar, with the city having no capital costs or responsibility for operation or maintenance for the 20-year period. The city would also receive "virtual net metering" credit from PEPCO at full retail rate.

Other smaller projects, such as the Public Works Department building and the Springhill Lake Recreation Center, would be pursued separately as roof mounting projects for which grants would be sought. One source of assistance with which staff would work is the Environmental Finance Center at the University of Maryland. According to Sterling, grants would support the installation of the system, with the result that the city would own it. Skolnik added that while the maintenance would then also belong to the city, the direct benefit is that the energy produced is completely free.

According to City Manager Michael McLaughlin, seeking grants would be the next step in the city's own program to reduce its electricity use and costs. Regarding the larger project, he said the city, as a government entity, needs to look at how it might handle a limited vendor situation, as well as analyzing cost break points for the proposal. It should be noted that city council-members and staff had received binders of additional background material on the Standard Solar proposal, which were not available to the public due to potential proprietary concerns.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts was of strong opinion that the project needs competition and should go out to bid, but that idea raised concern among some members of the staff and Green Team. Lippert thought that while there would be no problem bidding the smaller projects, which would be ready to build, the big project would have to be bid for "design and build."

Skolnik agreed, saying if the city were to go out to bid, it would have to be by RFP, "which would yield a smattering of proposals across the board that would be difficult to compare and judge." He believed it would be much to the city's advantage to go sole source. It was suggested that access by the vendor to an appropriate area for the solar array within the county might be a unique or at least limiting factor.

Robles also raised concerns about open bid for this project, saying that the results from an open bid would not even be as easy as comparing apples to oranges. Rather, she said, "It would be more like 'apples to chicken wings.'"

Davis closed that part of the discussion by saying there was precedent for the city using sole source or best source procurement and that nothing should be ruled out at this point.

The Green Team's recommended next steps include the three items discussed: consideration of pursuing the big project of generating solar energy for the city's electricity needs with Standard Solar, pursuit of grant sources for the smaller roof-mounted projects and discussion with Greenbriar regarding its interests.

Other municipal buildings that might potentially be suitable for rooftop solar in the future would be Green Ridge House, the Municipal Building, the Youth Center, the Community Center, the Old Greenbelt Theatre and facilities at Schrom Hills.

Greenbelt's New Community Website: GreenbeltOnline.org

by Susan Harris

A new Greenbelt Community website is now online.

A bit about Greenbelt's Internet history. Way back in 1995, the city welcomed its first community website, Greenbelt.com. It was an online directory of everything Greenbelt, plus a place for organizations and even individuals to have their very own web page. It also provided email accounts for over 100 people, with addresses like Bob@greenbelt.com.

Those early online services were due to a group of visionary geeks who organized as the Greenbelt Internet Access Cooperative. Sadly, the organization was dissolved in 2006 and the site was no longer updated. Happily for lovers of Greenbelt history, though, the site is still online and continues to provide email accounts to a few of its former members.

About a decade later, George Boyce, founder of Greenbelt MakerSpace, called a meeting to discuss Greenbelt's need for a community website and other online services. One happy result of that meeting went live this week, a New Year's gift to all Greenbelters: GreenbeltOnline.org, Greenbelt's newly designed, updated and expanded community website.

Greenbelt Online is in the process of becoming a tax-exempt nonprofit registered in Maryland.

What's on Greenbelt Online?

- Greenbelt Directories for Businesses, the Arts and the Community.
- The Greenbelt Blog, covering happenings, movie reviews, strength training, plus tips for setting up transition areas properly and preparing for race day. There is a fee.

cals, think pieces and much more. The 250 articles that were originally published on the blog "Greenbelt Live" from 2012 to 2016 have been moved to the new Greenbelt Blog (and Greenbelt Live will be taken down). Long-time Greenbelt bloggers Anna Socrates, Jeff Lemieux and this writer will be joined by new contributors to the blog in its new location.

- Photo Galleries of curated shots taken in Greenbelt and documenting life here.
- Videos about life in Greenbelt (also curated). They are also displayed on the new Greenbelt Maryland YouTube Channel.

How to Get Involved

- Write for the Greenbelt Blog, just once or more often. The editorial team will help with editing, illustrating and layout for the web, and the link to the article can be shared and included on writing portfolios.
- Submit your photos and videos for possible inclusion on the site.
- Help curate others' photos and videos for this site and our YouTube channel. The (unpaid) jobs of Photo Editor and Video Editor are waiting to be filled.
- Tell us if your organization is missing from the Community Directory, or if the link is bad. Help make the site all-inclusive and error-free.
- Help promote Greenbelt Online (thereby promoting Greenbelt and every one of its activities and businesses).
- Create a logo for the cause.

• What else? We're excited to hear your ideas.

For Greenbelt-based Businesses

- To get listed on the Business Directory, click "Directory" at the top of the page and follow instructions to send in your link, logo, text, and more. To cover expenses (at least until another funding source is identified) businesses are being asked to chip in $20 to get listed.

- Greenbelt Online is available to design and host web pages for Greenbelt businesses and organizations for a very modest fee.

- Greenbelt-connected musicians and artists – your directory is next. Contact us with your ideas.

Greenbelt Online Team

Greenbelt Online was designed and developed by Tanya Amaya and Bethany Gresser, the talented team behind the firm Analytic Design. Working out of Greenbelt MakerSpace in Roosevelt Center, this superlocal firm also won the contract with the Greenbelt News Review to create its new website that launched in late 2015.

Greenbelt Online's editorial team, responsible for all content and policies guiding the blog, is composed of Anna Socrates, Julie Winters and this writer. Blog policies include the requirement that articles be about Greenbelt (though the author may live elsewhere), and that language used be family-friendly.

Send your suggestions and especially your interest in getting involved to editor@greenbeltonline.com

Mayor Proposes Book Censorship Morrison Denounced For Profanity

Censorship of books sold in Greenbelt was proposed by Mayor Thomas J. Canning at the town council meeting last Monday night. Favoring an ordinance to ban "sexy stories," the mayor bowed to the decision of other council members to authorize Town Manager Chas. T. McDonald to discuss the matter first with Samuel Ashelman, manager of Greenbelt Consumer Services, and see if a solution could be reached.

Mr. Canning, while deplored the sale of comic books, scored violently the twenty-five cent books with sensational covers and contents "not fit for our young people to read." Particular reference was made by the mayor to the best seller dealing with the case of the only man left in a world of women and another with a dedication "To my wife ... who I hope never reads this book ..."

(Investigation of the Greenbelt public library revealed that one of the two books referred to by the mayor is on the circulating book shelf. Upon inquiry, it was learned that the purchase of the book had been recommended by several library associations.)

The mayor said that complaints had been made to GCS but that nothing had been done by them in the matter. He commented, however, that his proposal was not to be understood as an attack on the cooperative. The ordinance he had in mind would apply to "anyone selling books in Greenbelt."

Councilman Allen D. Morrison was the target for a vigorous denunciation by a visitor to the meeting.

Charging that Mr. Morrison had dragged her son and three other boys to the police station for tampering with comic sections of newspapers, she asked the council if a councilman had the right to deputize himself as a policeman and make an arrest. Mayor Canning said "no"; whereupon she said that Mr. Morrison had used profane language and that her son had not been guilty of tampering with the papers in the councilman's garage as he claimed.

Mr. Morrison quickly proceeded to give his side of the story calling as witness his small son who had been present throughout the meeting. He questioned the boy for several minutes over the protests of Mayor Canning that the meeting was over and of Council member Betty Harrington who objected to questioning the boy although she felt that the charge warranted a hearing by the council.

Following a loud exchange on all sides the mayor disposed of the matter by saying that it was a "private argument" and had no place at the meeting.

jonquils and fistfuls of early lettuces, we catch up with one another. Plans for impromptu suppers arise. The availability of this week's produce determines the menus.

The season progresses, and we ask, "Did you try the buckwheat honey?" of a neighbor. She in return says, "Yes, and how about those heirloom tomatoes?" We share smiles and laugh.

Over at the pool, families soak up the sun together. Lazy days, hot sun and splashing children lead to conversations. "Going to the movie tonight?" is followed by "Yes, do you want to meet up after with the kids?" We feel connected.

Strolling through Roosevelt Center in the afternoon is like walking down the corridor during high school. We meet up with old friends and make new ones. We engage.

While simple conversations, bunches of beets and movie dates hardly seem like the stuff that moves mountains, these create the invisible threads we call community in Greenbelt – and for a while, we can find sanctuary from the noise of the outside world.

Oh, what a relief it is!

May your 2017 bring you connectedness with your family and community.

While the crowds are not likely to continue into spring, there are tools to make the resolutions stronger. Psychologist John Norcross of Scranton University studied resolutions and people's ability to maintain them. He said two of the keys are making the resolutions manageable and using the buddy system.
